It was Thursday evening and the agenda was a prestigious launch of Kauai (pronounced much like Hawaii) and I was not sure what to expect. Kauai is to be found in Zimbali overlooking lakes and stunning indigenous bush.

I was very pleasantly impressed as I slid the little silver Alfa Romeo Mito I was test driving into a large underground parking bay meant for one of the units that I was about to be introduced to. I began imagining that this was my apartment; my home and I felt a thrill of pleasure and pride as I approached the entrance. Everything about the unit was very tastefully done. I stepped out of the elevator into the entrance hall, which serviced only 2 units and quickly made my way inside.

The room was filled with a crowd of some of the trendiest members of Ballito's social scene. I immediately noticed how well the unit coped as an entertainment facility, the open plan kitchen, lounge and dining area opened up onto a breezy veranda with incredible views. The cool evening breeze was keeping everyone refreshed. Everyone was in good spirits.

Part of the evening's proceedings was an impromptu Q&A session with none other than Springbok legend Percy Montgomery, Brand Ambassador for Kauai. Well his old mate Grant was asking the questions and he had Monty squirming under the pressure of a few closely worded ones. Around the unit and continued on my dream of the unit being mine. I loved the bedroom and its easy access to the veranda. The sound of the ocean softly mingling with the other night sounds. The unit was decorated with an ultra modern touch that still held onto earthy values. My head spun with the thought of owning such a place.

I got a moment to speak to Monty and asked him about his feelings on the unit. "A unit like this has everything you need," said Monty, "it offers a very convenient lifestyle," he added.

"Would Monty be my neighbour?" I wondered as I roamed about soaking up the feeling of total comfort and a false sense of self worth, which the unit had created.

I was blown away; words like stunning and awesome were on everybody's lips. Kauai. This is a dream that can come true.
